Mr. Robert Wilson is interviewing Ms. Kobayashi, who is applying for a job.

Mr. Wilson: Good morning. I'm Robert Wilson. You must be Ms. Kobayashi, is that right?

Ms. Kobayashi: Yes it is. Thank you for meeting me today.

Mr. Wilson: You're welcome. I'd like to ask you a few questions about your background. Is that OK?

Ms. Kobayashi: Yes, of course.

Mr. Wilson: First, could you tell me about your university education?

Ms. Kobayashi: Well, I will graduate from Seisen University in the department of English language and literature next year. Last year I studied abroad in Canada. Now I am writing a graduation paper about children's literature.

Mr. Wilson: I see. And could you tell me about how you might use your English skills to contribute to an international company like ours?

Ms. Kobayashi: I think I can use my English skills to communicate with the customers of your company.

Mr. Wilson: I see. And do you have any other skills that might be helpful in an international company?

Ms. Kobayashi: Well, I have taken a lot of translation classes at Seisen University. For example, as homework, I translated the website for my hometown. So I believe I could translate English and Japanese at a company like yours.

Mr. Wilson: I see. And could you tell me about why you are particularly interested in our company?

Ms. Kobayashi: Well, I'm interested in working for an international company and I'm very interested in your company's educational children's products.

Mr. Wilson: Very good. Well, Ms. Kobayashi, it seems you are well suited for our company. I'd like to ask you back for one more interview with our other staff members, next month.

Ms. Kobayashi: Thank you very much. I look forward to seeing you then.
