Tony: Good morning, Betty.

Betty: Oh, hi Tony. I heard you were in New York.

Tony: Yes, I just got back on Monday.

Betty: What did you do in New York?

Tony: I attended a birthday party for a teacher who turned ninety years old. She was my history teacher when I was in grade six of elementary school.

Betty: What? You went all the way to New York to attend a birthday party? Well, your teacher is lucky to have taught a student like you. What else did you do?

Tony: I walked across The High Line on the west side of Manhattan in New York.

Betty: The High Line? What's that? I've never heard of it.

Tony: Well, it's like a park on a bridge. It opened in 2009.

Betty: I can't imagine a park on a bridge. What is it famous for?

Tony: Let me see. The High Line is like a bridge made of an old railroad trail of the former New York Central Railroad. It's two kilometers long. The High Line has become famous for the wild plants and artwork along the way. And oh! The city view is great.

Betty: You mean the city recycled an old railroad and made it into a park?

Tony: That's right.

Betty: Interesting! I'd like to take a walk along the High Line someday.
