Teacher: Good morning class. As one of the significant women in the 20th century, I would like to introduce Margaret Mead, the person I admire most for her inspiring famous quote:

“A small group of thoughtful people could change the world. Indeed, it’s the only thing that ever has.” Mm, that’s so true.

Student: Mr. Adams, what does that quote mean?

Teacher: Well, this is an encouraging message to the people who believe that change is needed and that action needs to be taken to make that change. Even if it is a small group, change can happen.

Uh let me continue, Margaret Mead was born on December 16, 1901. She was an anthropologist.

Student: What’s an anthropologist?

Teacher: Um, it is a person who studies about human life and origin. Now, she is also known for introducing changes in the way we study different human cultures.

Student: Can you explain that further?

Teacher: Well, she believes that a person’s characteristics, which differ between men and women, are formed by cultural influence, and not handed on from birth.

Student: Does that mean that I became what I am because of the culture I was brought up in and not because of my father or mother?

Teacher: Uh, quite right. And not only was she an anthropologist, but she is also known as a writer.

Student: Did she write books?

Teacher: Well, I was just about to introduce the titles of her books. Now, now, keep your questions until I finish my lecture.
