Sheila: Hi, Tom.

Tom: Hi, Sheila. Ah—! The class I took this morning was very difficult. How was yours?

Sheila: It was interesting. The professor talked about plastic garbage in the ocean.

Tom: Oh? Tell me more about plastics! Anyway, let's go get some sandwiches for lunch. I think I'll get bacon, lettuce and tomato sandwiches.

Sheila: You mean BLT? That sounds good. I think I'll have the same.

Tom: So, what did the professor say about plastic garbage?

Sheila: Well, he said that every year, millions of tonnes of plastic enter the ocean. If no action is taken, the plastic will impact our ecosystems and health.

Tom: How bad is the situation?

Sheila: Well, it's tough to say exactly how much plastic is in the ocean. Scientists think about 8 million metric tonnes of plastic have entered the ocean so far. That's the weight of nearly 90 aircraft carriers, and the problem continues to grow.

Tom: Oh, no! And what kind of plastics are thrown away?

Sheila: These plastics come in many different forms. Just think about all the plastic items you use daily: the toothbrush you use in the morning, the container your lunch comes in, or the bottle you drink water from after sports.

Tom: Wow, if that is true, we must do something about it.

Sheila: Yes. We can reduce plastic use. Think about all the plastic items you use every day. Can you count them all? Look around you. How many plastic things can you see?

Tom: You mean, we should be more aware of how and why we use plastics?

Sheila: That's right. That is the first step. Then we should change our habits by recycling plastic and reducing garbage.

Tom: Okay. What else can we do?

Sheila: You can volunteer and participate in a plastic cleanup.

Tom: What is a plastic cleanup?

Sheila: A plastic cleanup is an event to pick up plastic garbage in your community and at the beach near you. Remember that our land and sea are connected.

Tom: I guess we can form a team to clean up our community.

Sheila: Yes, let's start a school cleanup event.

Tom: I'm all for it.
